Another "I his based in its appeal upon the recent crowning of Jeas Williard with the puglistic championship, is called "Between Rounds." Just where the fun of it comes in does not appear. The two offerings of O. E. Cesare are neither of them as good as some he has just shown at the Itahio Gallery. George Luks has had a fling at the art critics in his "Portrait of a New-Art Critic." Instead of lampooning him in the old classical way, Mr. Luke has "lamp-posted" him hexagonally and made him look as ridiculous as any of the modernist paintings that he might have criticised. Herb Roth has made a clever carlicature of Irvin 8. Cobb, and Oliver flarford has contributed a couple of clever nudes, in tint, but they are not sparkling with wit.

Alfred Frueh has cut some elaborate paper dolls in colored papers. His is actually libelous as to the "female form divine."

Boardman Robinson has sent ten drawings in his characteristically heavy style. H. J. Glintencamp, in his "The Stage Door," had a happy inspiration, but his drawing only flickers mildly in its sustained humor. Stuart Davis's "Galley Slaves in a Summer Hotel," which is an interesting study "below stairs," shows rather more tragically than humorously that these menials are human.

Certain of the included drawings are characterised by features that led to elimination in the recent Municipal Gallery showing.
